

Over the past two years, investors have had to balance fear and greed amidst market, economic, and political unpredictability. Since 2020, the divergence between asset price performance and fundamentals has never been starker. As a reminder, stock prices were surging higher in the spring and summer of 2020 despite double-digit unemployment and closures of large economic segments. It was not easy to be bullish with news like the New York Times front-page below.

JOB LOSSES SOAR; U.S. VIRUS CASES TOP WORLD

Since the coronavirus descended on Brooklyn Hospital Center three weeks ago, the staff has handled over 800 potential cases.

New Data Shows Staggering Toll of Outbreak

This article is by Ben Cassese, Patricia Cohen and Tiffany Wu.

More than three million people filed for unemployment benefits last week, sending a collective shudder throughout the economy that is unlike anything Americans have experienced.

The alarming numbers, in a report released by the Labor Department on Thursday, provide some of the first hard data on the economic toll of the coronavirus pandemic, which has shut down whole swaths of American life faster than government statistics can keep track.

Just three weeks ago, barely 200,000 people applied for jobless benefits, a historically low number. In the half-century that the government has tracked applications, the worst week ever, with 695,000 so-called initial claims, had been in 1982.

Thursday's figure of nearly 3.3 million set a gross record. "A large part of the economy just collapsed," said Ben Horowitz, executive director of IHS Markit, a business data and analytics firm.

The numbers provided only the first part of the economic catastrophe in progress. Even comparatively optimistic forecasts expect millions more lost jobs, and with them homelessness, evictions and bankruptcies. Thousands of businesses have closed in response to the pandemic, and many will never reopen. Some economists say the decline in gross domestic product this year could rival the worst years of the Great Depression.

And there was fresh evidence on Thursday of the relentless course of the virus itself. Cases in the United States now exceed 80,000, the most of any nation, even China and Italy, according to a New York Times database. More than 1,000 deaths across the country have been linked to the virus.

At least 100 million people are...

Continued on Page A17

Nearly 3.3 million unemployment claims were filed last week, a record number.

Unfilled Posts Force Scramble By Washington

By JENNIFER STEINHAUER and ZILAN KANNON-YOUNG

WASHINGTON — Of the 75 senior positions at the Department of Homeland Security, 29 are either vacant or filled by acting officials, including Chad F. Wolf, the acting secretary who recently was unable to tell a Senate committee how many registrars and protective base made were available in the United States.

The National Park Service, which has many federal agencies in full of vacancies in key posts, tried this week to fill the job of a director for the national capital region after forces of states blocked to see the cherry blossoms near the National Mall, covering a potential public health hazard as the coronavirus continues to spread.

At the Department of Veterans Affairs, workers are scrambling to order medical supplies on Amazon after its leaders, lacking experience in disaster response, failed to prepare for the onslaught of patients at its medical centers.

Ever since President Trump came into office, a record high turnover and unfilled jobs has plagued officials across wide swaths of the federal bureaucracy. Now, current and former administration officials and disaster experts say the coronavirus has exposed these failings as never before.

Continued on Page A11

Online Class With No Way To Get There

By NIKETIA STEWART

Allia Phillips was excited about picking up an iPad from her school in Harlem last week. She did not want to miss any classes and hoped to land on the fourth-grade honor roll again.

On Monday the first day that New York City public schools began remote learning, the 10-year-old placed her iPad on a tray she set up over her phone on a twin bed in a studio that she shares with her mother and grandmother inside a homeless shelter on the Upper West Side.

And then, Allia saw nothing. "I went downstairs to find out that they don't have any internet," said Kasha Phillips-Lewis, Allia's mother. "You're screwing up my daughter's education. You want to screw me up? Fine. But not my daughter's education."

The Department of Education, which runs the largest school system in the country with more than 11 million students, began attempting to reach all students through remote learning this week because schools were closed to slow the spread of the coronavirus.

Shuttering the vast system, which includes 1,800 schools, was a serious challenge for the city, and the large-scale, indefinite school closures are uncharted territory altering the lives and...

Continued on Page A16

Courage at a Brooklyn Hospital, At the Front of an Invisible War

By SHERI FINK

It was not even 9 in the morning and Dr. Sylvia de Jesus's green N95 mask, which was supposed to be a seal against her face, was already askew.

In briefing rooms on Monday she jangled in clings between the emergency department she chairs at the Brooklyn Hospital Center and a room outside, keeping a sharp eye on the three doctors, nurses and other staff members who would screen nearly 100 walk-in patients for the coronavirus that day.

Inside her E.R., more than a dozen people showing signs of infection waited for evaluation in an area used just a few weeks ago for stitches and casts. Another dozen lay on gurneys arranged one in front of the next. Like a New York City car park, one man on a ventilator was waiting for space in the intensive care unit.

Minutes before paramedics wheeled in a heart attack patient, Dr. de Jesus pointed to beds reserved for serious emergencies, exposed by a newly constructed wall from the suspected virus case.

"This is not safe area," she said a moment. Then she collected herself. "This is thought to be safe." There was really no way...

Continued on Page A17

With Supplies Waning, Workers Soldier On

Professional baseball greeted a new season this afternoon with an Opening Day game for the ages, an extra-inning masterpiece that vividly undid the on-the-edge field of the imagination.

The crack of the bat could almost be heard, the blur of white almost seen, the communal joy nearly felt.

From the moment the first batter tipped his helmet — and a hard line out — to the walk-off home run by a faltering pinch-hitter, this 11-inning affair redefined what constitutes a perfect game. It is one career about the coronavirus; the distraction was reward enough.

Don't misunderstand: This...

Continued on Page A17

No Crowd, but I'll Take You Out to the Ballgame

By DAN BARRY

Professional baseball greeted a new season this afternoon with an Opening Day game for the ages, an extra-inning masterpiece that vividly undid the on-the-edge field of the imagination.

The crack of the bat could almost be heard, the blur of white almost seen, the communal joy nearly felt.

From the moment the first batter tipped his helmet — and a hard line out — to the walk-off home run by a faltering pinch-hitter, this 11-inning affair redefined what constitutes a perfect game. It is one career about the coronavirus; the distraction was reward enough.

Don't misunderstand: This...

A Fan Writes a Fantasy for Opening Day

From the moment the first batter tipped his helmet — and a hard line out — to the walk-off home run by a faltering pinch-hitter, this 11-inning affair redefined what constitutes a perfect game. It is one career about the coronavirus; the distraction was reward enough.

Don't misunderstand: This...

Continued on Page A17

Weekly unemployment claims

See Office Hours for information on COVID-19. Source: BUREAU OF LABOR STATISTICS

BUSINESS B1-9

Armed With Sewing Machines
With hospitals desperate for masks, people are pulling out their sewing machines to fill the void. PAGE B1

A Gusher Can't Be Contained
A chronic mismatch between supply and demand for oil means the world is running out of places to store it. PAGE B8

INTERNATIONAL A10-20

Mahoro Is Indicted in U.S.
Federal prosecutors accused the Vanuatu president, whom the U.S. no longer recognizes, of participating in a neo-terrorist conspiracy. PAGE A10

Norway's Rival Releasts
The Israeli prime minister was set to maintain power after his rival reversed course, citing the pandemic. PAGE A10

Brushing Aside a Slaughter
Russia and China, which often steeled its grudge against other countries, are employing selective memory to address a massacre that occurred in their leader in 1988. PAGE A10

NATIONAL A11-21

New Focus on Health System
The pandemic gives added urgency to a central issue that was already a main talking point for Joseph R. Biden Jr. and other Democrats. PAGE A11

Starting Over on Foster Care
A lawsuit led New Mexico to remake its failing system into one advocates hope will serve as a national model. PAGE A11

SPORTSFRIEDAY B11-15

Slow to Embrace a Delay
Admission questions why U.S. Olympic leaders took so long to join calls to postpone the Tokyo Games. PAGE B11

WEEKEND ARTS C1-16

For Post-Sale Paleontologists
Like dinosaurs? More crayons? Take a peek at two pages reprinted from the New York Times for Kids. PAGE C1

It's Virtually Perfect
Donald Judd's installation, below, at the Guggenheim Gallery is impressive, in person or, for now, online. PAGE C15

OBITUARIES A24-25

Chronicler of U.S. History
Richard Reeves's books on Nixon, Clinton and others could be as inspiring as his columns. He was 63. PAGE A24

Globetrotters' Dean of Drabble
Fred "Curly" Neal started fast with his ball-handling wizardry in more than 4,000 games. He was 71. PAGE A24

EDITORIAL, OP ED A26-27

Paul Krugman PAGE A27

EDITORIAL, OP ED A26-27

Paul Krugman PAGE A27

Paul Krugman PAGE A27

The stock market bottomed the week the headline above was published. Since then, the S&P 500 has more than doubled. Those investors who could silence their fear and focus on technical signals and fiscal and monetary stimulus prospered.

Simultaneous feelings of fear and greed were overwhelming and detrimental to many investors over the past two years.

As we look ahead, we believe those same emotional biases will hinder investors. In this piece, we examine two biases that often handcuff investors and push them to make the wrong decisions at the wrong time. Our intention to make you aware of these subconscious forces is to help you manage both fear and greed and, ultimately, your wealth.

Need a plan to protect your hard earned savings from the next bear market? ➤ Schedule your consultation today

Availability Bias - Fear

Proposals for new nuclear power plants often come under resounding negative pressure from local communities. According to Britannica, the phrase NIMBY (not in my backyard) was coined because of the 'threat' of new nuclear power plants.

Ask your friends or neighbors, and they would likely be distraught at the prospect of a nuclear power plant in their neighborhood. The reason is Three Mile Island, Fukushima, and Chernobyl in most cases.

Nuclear power plant disasters, while very rare, are extremely powerful in terms of the public's perception of nuclear power. No one wants nukes in their backyard, despite the fact they are low cost, reliable, and produce no carbon emissions. As the graph below shows, nuclear energy is not only one of the greenest forms of energy production, but it is also the safest.

Availability bias occurs when people base their sense of risk on examples that quickly come to mind when a topic arises. When most people think of nuclear energy, Chernobyl, Three Mile

Island, and Fukushima are top of mind.

Our collective availability bias against nuclear energy arguably results in more environmentally unfriendly, costlier, and deadlier energy options. Simply it causes us to make poor risk/reward decisions.

Availability Bias ? Market Crashes

Investors can face the same crippling fear that nuclear energy protestors harbor.

The years 1929, 1987, 2000, and 2008 elicit anxiety from investors. Those four stock market crashes erased massive wealth in relatively short periods. Many people believe the crashes appeared out of the blue with no ability to detect them in advance.

The reality is all four were predictable. Timing a crash is difficult but quantifying the risk of a crash and the conditions leading to a crash are manageable. For example, we wrote 1987 to highlight plenty of fundamental and technical warnings in advance of the most significant single-day market crash.

The combination of high valuations and the fear of a market crash inevitably left many investors over the last year on the sidelines. While such a stance may prove correct in the longer run, those investors are sorely missing the ability to compound wealth in the shorter run. In the case of availability bias, investors are putting too much emphasis on risk and not enough time properly managing the risk.

Real Investment Report

Market updates, sector analysis, 401k plan manager & more.

Subscribe today

Herd Mentality - Greed

It is often at market peaks that investors fail to appreciate risk and instead follow the bullish herd. Jim Cramer, for example, and many others make a living promoting bullish views. They thrive in bull markets. When markets roar ahead, extreme optimism and promises of much higher prices make the promoter's siren songs hard to ignore.

Famed investors, Wall Street analysts, and the media prey on ill-equipped investors by justifying high valuations and forecasting ever-higher prices. Their narratives rationalizing steep valuation premiums and bold return forecasts become widespread. To some, they appear to be facts. Despite evidence to the contrary and historical precedence, investors buy the hype. "This time is different," say the promoters.

As bull markets run at full steam, the call of the promoters elicits a fear of missing out (FOMO) or behavioral herding. Most investors blindly mimic the behavior of other investors without seeking the rationality behind it.

"There is nothing so disturbing to one's well-being and judgment as to see a friend get rich?" - Charles Kindleberger: Manias, Panics, and Crashes

In the case of herd mentality, we fail to manage risk as we become so focused on rewards.

Straddling the Line

In 1999, we showed current equity valuations are as extreme as those periods leading to the four crash events. A 40-50% market decline or even more would be statistically expected. There is no doubt our risk awareness should be on high alert. Blindly following your friends, neighbors, and Jim Cramer is a recipe for disaster. Do not ignore the palatable risks.

While blindly following the herd is dangerous, focusing too heavily on prior market crashes is also problematic. There is no golden rule that says markets must correct when they appear too expensive. Valuations may stay grossly elevated this year and next year. It's also feasible, although highly unlikely, prices are stable, but valuations correct because earnings growth is fantastic.

Solely focusing on prior crashes and current extreme valuations may result in the inability to compound your wealth. If you sat out the last year, you missed outsized returns, which could have cushioned recent declines and made risk management a little easier.

Summary

Zen-like awareness allows us to run with the bulls and hide from the bears.?? Zen and the Art of Risk Management

Growing wealth is complex, especially when markets are at extremes like today. Worrying about 1987 or 1929 can leave you woefully underinvested while markets roar ahead. Blindly following stock promoters may leave you dangerously at risk.

As important as it is to think for ourselves, it is equally important to understand our psychological makeup. A strong understanding of a market's technical and fundamental backings and the ability to fend off the urges of fear and greed is the equation for long-term investment success. Such is far from easy, which helps explain why so few investors continually make fortunes over decades.