

In a recent interview with Lawrence Lepard we dig down into the lessons of history to discern what will be the probable outcomes in the future for investors. Lawrence Lepard has a long history as a private equity manager and making early bets on the technology before "it was thing." He is currently the managing partner at Equity Management Associates (EMA) which is a private investment partnership which pursues investments in companies that have growth at a reasonable price (GARP) characteristics. We have broken down the interview into "bite sized" pieces for easier consumption.

---

Why Lessons From The 1900's Are Important To Today's Markets

---

How To Invest With An Activist Fed

---

How We Got From The Housing Bubble To Here

---

How To Deal With Today's Financial Terrorists

---

Why The Tide Is Going Out On Interest Rates